The WEEKLY REGISTER.

LONDON, SATURDAY, November 27, 1731. NUMB. LXXXV.

NOTHING surely can be more pleasant than to hear a Man, who pretends to reason, exclaim, at the Beginning of a Debate, to his Adversary, Look ye, Sir, all you say signifies nothing, you shall never convince me; such a Person declares himself a Bigot at once, and 'tis fighting with the Wind to answer him: Whoever enters the Lists with Fog or the Craftsman disputes on the same Terms, and is sure before Hand that his Opponent will never acknowledge himself in the wrong: The very Design of their Papers implies the contrary; they are the standing Armies of Jacobitism and Disaffection, and are to live at Discretion on the Spoil of publick Affairs. The constant weekly Return of these Libels is a most flagrant Proof, that they are not only now out of Humour with the Administration, but that they design to continue so; that they not only complain of present Errors, but are prepar'd to expose the future, even before they have a Being; the most arbitrary of common Pædagogues allow a Respite to the Scourge sometimes, and only keep it in Sight in Terrorum; but these tyrannick Patriots are perfectly merciless, and keep the Wound bleeding with fresh and continual Lacerations.——'Tis not with the least Hope then to convert them from the Evil of their Ways, or render them more cautious for the Time to come, that I, or any other of their Antagonists oppose them, but for the Sake of Truth, and the Publick in general; by Way of Antidote to a Poison, by Way of Medicine to a dangerous and epidemick Disease, Spies, in all Countries, are justly treated with the utmost Rigour; they are believ'd the most fatal of all Enemies, the most difficult to guard against, and yet the most to be prevented: Fog and the Craftsman are as much Spies as the Nature of their Warfare will give them Leave; 'tis true they have declar'd open War against the Government, and began Hostilities long ago; but then they so often attempt a Cessation, by putting on the Guise of Friends, by counterfeiting a Zeal for the Common-wealth, and confessing a Concern even for their own Disaffection, that they rather act as Spies than regular Troops, and never put on these Airs of Sanctity without a Design to betray; the Craftsman makes it his Cue to pray very heartily for the KING and Royal Family, when he designs most to deprive them of the Hearts of the People; and Fog prates most on Liberty and Property, when he is plotting most for their Destruction, and drudging most for the Pretender. It must be observ'd this Brace of Patriot Journalists are not united by their Principles, but their Interests; they believe quite differently in their political Creed, but make their Actions square as if both were the same. The Craftsman is an old Whig with a prodigious Complaisance for the High Clergy because they are his Admirers: Fog is a veteran Tory that has adopted the Whig Principles to serve a Turn, and yet rails against the Bench of Bishops because they have not canoniz'd Sacheverel: Both have join'd Forces for the common Cause, and Spite of private Jars keep up a tolerable good Understanding, while the Debate continues, but, as soon as 'tis over, they'll become irreconcileable Enemies again, and treat one another with the same Virulence that they now exert against the common Enemy.——The merriest Circumstance of their Alliance is this, they both flatter themselves that they make a Tool of each other, and mutually boast of their mutual Infidelity.——Fog laughs in his Sleeve that he divides the Whigs against themselves, and the Craftsman sneers in Return that he makes the Jacobites the Dupes for his Preferment.——But to be more serious, what shall we say of two Writers who make it their constant Business to inveigh against the Government; to be upon the Watch for little idle Tales of Malice, and Mischief, which they may retail again to the Publick, to make themselves popular; who are not occasional Remarkers on State-Affairs, but Libellers for Life; who are perpetually on the Hunt for Scandal, and are disappointed of their Prey, if there is none to be found; who make Imagination supply the Place of Fact, and feed upon their own Calumnies; who place their Interest in national Calamities, and make it their Glory to distress the Ministry; who would be undone if Cavils should be wanting to keep up the blind Fury of a Party, and who dread nothing more than Concord and Unanimity between the King and his People; what shall we say to such Writers as these? Are they secret Spies on the Conduct of the Administration? or open Enemies to the Repose of the State? Surely Spies, who were employ'd by our Rivals in Power or Empire, could not act otherwise, to be most faithful to their Principals, could not more diligently pry into the Weaknesses of the State, or be more industrious to expose them: Neither could our Enemies rejoice more in any unavoidable Calamity, increase it more by Rumour, or insult our Unhappiness than they. This is prov'd by the whole Series of their Conduct, and Writings; it has been their sole Aim to disconcert our Councils, and spirit up the People to desire a Change; they have endeavour'd to infuse their own Passions into the Multitude, and make them Parties to their own Undoing: Yet these very People, this dark Cabal, this irritated Faction have assum'd the glorious Name of Patriot, and stil'd themselves the Friends of the Publick.——The Publick, too often susceptible of Slander, and apt to be misled by Falsehood, for some little while was almost tempted to believe them, but their own Folly has at last remov'd the Prejudice; we are rouz'd from so unjust and wild a Dream, and can see the Snare we have avoided.——We can never trust one Minister who has so effectually betray'd us already, or delegate the Direction of the State to another who is not able to command himself; No, he, who out of Power is abundantly more arbitrary and imperious than the Person he abuses for being in, is hardly fit to be any other than what he is; neither is it likely he will.——Hence-forward they may continue to rave as obstreperously as they please; 'tis not to do us any Service, but advance themselves; 'tis not for the Sake of the publick Benefit, but their own private Ambition; we are only made the Tools for them to work with; and, if ever their End should be gain'd, must be set aside, like Pope SIXTUS's Net when the Fish was taken.——'Tis our Business then to desert them first, to scorn their infamous Drudgery, to be influenc'd by our own Sentiments, to be determin'd by our own Judgments, to see with our own Eyes, and credit only what we feel.—— By discovering themselves they have gone a great Way towards our Conviction, and it must be our Merit to do the rest; 'twill be but a seasonable Compliment to Truth, and a just Mortification to them who endeavour'd to mislead us; they have been no better than false Lights, on a Sea-Coast, that seem'd to guide Ships to their Port, but seduc'd them on Rocks and Quick-Sands, to become the Prey of those who liv'd on such Misfortunes.

To the AUTHOR of the WEEKLY REGISTER.

SIR,

THE following Prologue, with the Letter annex'd to it, was sent by an unknown Hand to a Gentleman who had wrote a Play for the Stage, which is not accepted; but the Author being desirous to own the Favour, begs you'd be so good as to publish it with his Acknowledgments, which will very much oblige,

Sir, &c.

SIR,

IF any Hint in the following rough Draught can be of Service to you in the Prologue to your Comedy; it will answer the Expectation of your well-Wisher: I am not unacquainted with the Usage you have met with from ——, and could wish to have them expos'd and reprimanded for it in a publick Manner. I am,

Your unknown Friend, O. P.

BOLD is the Man (in this discerning Age)
Who hopes to charm the modern Critick's Rage;
Tastes so refin'd, so difficult to hit,
Require Sense, Satire, Elegance and Wit
In vain the Poet works the swelling Scene,
A well-laid Plot, an easy Stile is vain,
Perfection only, —— can Applause obtain.
Much too severe, stern Justice ye pursue,
To meaning well some little Merit's due;
Justice, with Mercy blended, speaks the Judgment true.
Freely to Night, our Bard submits his Cause;
But hopes, you'll try him by indulgent Laws.
Then if by Chance he touch the generous Heart,
And Nature pleas'd acknowledges his Art,
One Beauty may for many Faults attone.
Conscious his Scenes no Enemies can raise,
He hopes your Pardon, —— shou'd he fail of Praise.
Obscenity shall find no Quarter here,
Nor ought that can offend the nicest Ear,
No private Character he brings to Stake,
And only lashes Vice, —— for Virtue's Sake;
No Party Rage your Passions shall inflame,
To please and to instruct is all his Aim.
Nor think him vain, —— these petty Arts to shun,
Tho' practis'd by Apollo's eldest Son,
Who only by himself can be outdone.
But who can paint the anxious Poet's Pain,
The whirling Passions that distract his Brain?
Trembling he stands aghast. —— with downcast Eye,
Perceives the Hour of his Probation nigh,
Lost in Despair! —— unequal to the Task,
He views the Laurel, which he dares not ask;
Here Modesty stops short —— and bids him pause,
Till boldly justify'd by your Applause.

On the Gratitude of Misers.

THERE is no one Vice more unreasonable, or more absurd than Avarice; nothing that makes a Man more contemptible in himself, or more useless, often more injurious to Society: 'tis an excellent Observation that 'tis very difficult for a Miser to be an honest Man, because his everlasting Itch after Gain will always tempt him to advantage himself, at the Expence of his Neighbour; and as rich Men have it more in their Power than any others, 'tis ten to one but their Selfishness prevails, and what was done with some Remorse at first, becomes habitual in the End, and mingles with the minutest Particular in Life.——From hence-forward the Miser becomes a common Enemy; he lives upon the Plunder of Mankind, and amasses Treasure from the Distresses of all about him; Pity and Commiseration forsake him from that Moment, his Eye becomes unacquainted with Tears, and his Heart with Sorrow, unless he suffers in his own darling Passions, and loses by Fraud, what was gain'd by Oppression; then the World regards his Misery with the same Unconcern, that he us'd to pride himself in at the Miseries of the World; for whoever once resigns Compassion for others, will never meet with it himself.——Neither is it sufficient for a Man to heap up Riches, without doing an actual Violence to others, without the immediate Reproach of Dishonesty, and the Infamy that attends it; he who gathers Riches only for himself, will never know what Friendship means; for no one will devote their Services to him, who disavows all Assistance to others; Society is form'd on mutual Dependencies, and mutual good Offices, and he, who refuses the Benefit in his Power, is no Member of the Society, but a World, a narrow, base, mercenary World in himself; no Person is an honest Man, merely because he has refrain'd from Injuries; 'tis necessary he should do Good too, or else he disappoints one of the noblest Ends of his Creation, and makes a Blank of his Life, for the Hand of Censure to fill: He only becomes, or deserves Riches who uses them as they ought for his own Happiness, in the Support and Relief of others; such a Man is the Joy of the Publick, and the Delight of Mankind; he may enjoy Wealth with Safety, and grow great with Honour; he will be secure from Envy, and hardly know an Enemy, because the Business of his Life is Goodness and Charity.——I have often wonder'd that Men who are but the Graves of their own Wealth, and are only known to be rich by their Oppressions, and Injuries to others, I have often wonder'd that they are ever treated above the Level of their Appearance, and Expences; for he who makes himself a Beggar, ought to be esteem'd as one, and should meet with Contempt accordingly.—— Another Thing that surprizes me as much, is, that they should ever light on People to entertain them in the Decline of their Lives, when Age has added to their Infirmities, when they stand most in Need of Succour, and are least inclin'd to do any Thing to deserve it; I mean those who have not Families, and Relations of their own, which is oftentimes the Curse of such Characters, and, by that Means, are forc'd to bequeath their darling Hoards of Rapine, and Injustice to those who neither thank them for the Gift, or do Honour to their Memories.——I am surpriz'd, I say, they should ever meet with such Indulgence, because 'tis notorious they have generally bilk'd even their last Benefactor, and died in Debt for the common Necessaries of Life, as well as numberless Complacencies, and Civilities, that render'd their Lives chearful and easy; leaving their enormous Estates, fantastically to People remotely related, perhaps, who for Years before had only pray'd for their Deaths, or to intire Strangers who had barely heard of their Extortions, who curs'd the very Hand that left them so wicked a Legacy, and rioted away, what they had pin'd themselves to save.——'Tis but very lately a Miser of this Stamp left the World, in this Manner, and provided largely for every Body, but those who had us'd him best; as if Ingratitude was always to be added to Avarice, that Men might begin one Vice in the superior Malignancy of another.——One would think a Person who had heap'd up Riches [illegible] by Injustice, or a Neglect of those Humanities, and Generosities which are the Duty of all Men, when such a Person could enjoy his Possessions no longer, and Death [illegible] Warning of his Dissolution, one would think [illegible] make his Will a Kind of Retribution for all the [illegible]

had done, an Atonement for all the Acts of Charity he had omitted, and a Reward for all the Services he had receiv'd. ——Surely 'tis but common Prudence to part with Riches, when we muſt part with them, on the moſt juſt and reputable Terms in our Power; nay 'tis even Frugality to do ſo; for, by that Means, we purchaſe, at an eaſy Rate, a good deal of that Fame, which we had been ſo long deficient in; it leaves a pleaſing Remembrance of us in the Minds of Men, and, for one good Deed, they will forgive a Multitude of Faults.——I have now my Eye on old Craſſus; he has lodg'd himſelf for ſeveral Years in a Family who treat him with Tenderneſs, and Reſpect, and make it the Buſineſs of their Lives to render the latter Part of his Being pleaſant, and comfortable; he ſhares in their Pleaſures, makes one at their Entertainments, is complimented with his Bottle, and every other Circumſtance in a handſome and generous Manner.——Craſſus pays a very moderate Price for all theſe Conceſſions, and thinks there is no Obligation; never once imagines there is any Merit in bearing or alleviating the Infirmities of Age; in incommoding their own Family in Civility to him, and even in loſing Money yearly by their Gueſt; he believes his ſcanty Allowance is ſufficient Reward, nor ever dreams of making any farther Retaliation; at the ſame Time that he divides in his Will a moſt plentiful Fortune amongſt ſome very diſtant Relations, who have no Plea either of Friendſhip, or Affection, to his Favour.——I take it for granted Craſſus will read this Paper, and, as he is a Man of Senſe, I expect this Hint will be ſufficient to excite him to do what Gratitude and Juſtice ſhould have executed long ago.——He will not be aſham'd of learning what is right, when a Stranger is affected by it for its own Sake; he will not be ſo much his own Enemy as to die a Bankrupt in Virtue, and leave his beſt Friend to deteſt his Memory.——Good Offices ought not to be done for Reward, but thoſe who receive them can never be excus'd from a Retaliation, to the very utmoſt of their Power.

FOREIGN NEWS.

JAMAICA, Sept. 14. The Shoreham Man of War, in her Paſſage between Barbadoes and this Place, met with a violent Hurricane, wherein ſhe loſt all her Maſts. Barbadoes is almoſt ruined thereby, and Hiſpaniola ſuffered extremely. We had a Blaſt of its Tail, which is attended with ſuch dry Weather, that the Sugar Canes and Proviſions are almoſt all deſtroy'd. We have miſſed both of the May and Auguſt Rains, and have not had a Seaſon to plant a Grain of Corn or Proviſion; ſo God knows what will become of us! The Officers and Soldiers are one half dead, and the others are ſo ſickly as to be of no poſſible Service. I never ſaw People drop off ſo faſt in my Life.

Hague, Nov. 23. Our Merchants have received Letters from their Correſpondents at Liſbon, adviſing that there has been lately diſcovered in the Portugueze Weſt-Indies, a Gang of Coiners, who have counterfeited the Species of that Country, ſome ſay to the Amount of ſeven, but others magnify the Quantity of this falſe Coin to ten Millions. The ſame Letters add, that among thoſe Coiners, there are ſeveral Jeſuites, who perceiving they ſhould make but a poor Hand of converting the Natives of the Country, had a Mind to try what they could do with the Converſion of Metals. Whatever there may be in this Story, it has put us upon our Guard againſt being ſurprized with the Running of any of thoſe counterfeit Species into theſe Provinces.

His Excellency the Earl of Cheſterfield perſiſts indefatigably in his Endeavours to remove all the Difficulties that are ſtarted from Time to Time, to retard the Acceſſion of this State to the Treaty of Vienna. Count Sinzendorff, on the contrary, ſeems to keep himſelf very reſerved, and to make a Secret of the Extent of the Powers he has received from his Court; and if at any Time he happens to expand a little, he always does it as if it were without Authority, and as if he was afraid what he ſays would not be approved by his Court. This Manner of negotiating is not without its Uſe, nor yet devoid of Merit, upon ſome Occaſions; but in the preſent Caſe it might have broke off all Treaty before now, if the Earl of Cheſterfield had not condeſcended to be in ſome Sort a Mediator, and to ſuggeſt the Means of ſurmounting all the Obſtacles that are raiſed on both Sides. Upon the whole Matter, though we cannot flatter ourſelves that their High-Mightineſſes Acceſſion is ſo near, as we thought it ſome Months ago; yet neither do we deſpair of ſeeing it done before the opening of the Britiſh Parliament, that ſo the Earl of Cheſterfield may go over with all the Satisfaction he can deſire.

We are ſtill told, there is upon the Carpet a Treaty of Alliance between England, France, and Spain, to which the Emperor will be invited to accede; whereby the Peace of Europe will be better eſtabliſhed than ever it was yet. What ſeems to confirm this Report, is, that they begin to talk at ſeveral Courts of reforming the Troops, which is already executed in Part at ſome of them.

Private Letters from Vienna ſay, the Emperor's Reſolution is daily expected, concerning the Succeſſion to the Duchy of Deuxponts; but is it not to be feared, that Difference of Religion will have too great an Influence in the Deciſion of that Affair; and conſequently, that it will turn out in Favour of the Prince Palatine of France, the Lutherans at Ratiſbon, and moſt of the Proteſtant Powers, have declared themſelves for the Prince of Birkenfeld, whoſe Pretenſions ſeem to be well grounded, he having on his Side, 1. Duke Wolfang's Will. 2. The Confirmation of that Will by the Emperor Maximilian II. 3. The Family Compacts. 4. The Imperial Inveſtitures given without Reſtriction or Reſerve, from Time to Time, upon that foot. Whereas the Elector Palatine, on the other hand, alledges only in general his Right of Seniority to all the Countries of the Palatinate; which is, nevertheleſs, a Caſe that ſeldom happens in the Succeſſion to the Electorates, excepting ſome few Seniorities quoad Linealem Succeſſionem, as to the Lineal Succeſſion; eſpecially when there are ſuch ſolid Arguments againſt it.

Paris, Nov. 23. Among many other remarkable Stories written from Provence, concerning the Affair of Father Girard and Mademoiſelle Cadiere, and of the Sentence pronounced by the Parliament of Aix, there is one almoſt unheard of, and to indifferent Perſons inconceivable; to wit, that eleven Counſellors or Judges unanimouſly gave their Opinion for buning that Jeſuite alive, as a Violator of the ſacred Myſteries of the Church and Religion; whilſt ten others of thoſe Gentlemen could find in their Hearts to vote, that he ſhould be purely and ſimply acquitted, without the leaſt Puniſhment or Detention: Two other Counſellors, namely, Monſieur de Galice and Monſieur de Saffren, adviſed them, the former, to condemn him to Impriſonment or Galleys for Life; the latter to perpetual Baniſhment: A third, Monſieur Reguſſe, was for taking farther Information, examining the Witneſſes over again, and impriſoning the Penitents who were called Stigmatiſées; and had his Advice been taken, the Jeſuite had certainly been burnt, the Stigmatiſées hang'd, and another Jeſuite in their Company: But by ſome ſecret Springs, Father Girard eſcaped them all.

Legborn, Nov. 10. A Copy of the Oath which Count Charni, General of the Spaniſh Forces, took the firſt Inſtant, viz. I Emanuel d'Orleans, Count de Charni, &c. do promiſe, ſwear, and engage, as well for myſelf as for the Officers and Soldiers of his Catholick Majeſty, that I will always obſerve inviolably the moſt religious Fidelity and Obedience to the Orders of the moſt Serene John Gaſton, Grand Duke of Tuſcany, as lawful and only Sovereign of the States of Tuſcany: That each of us, upon entering into the Service of his Royal Highneſs, will be ready to defend his Perſon, Sovereignty, Authority, Eſtates, Effects, and Subjects, and all whatever belongs to him, provided that he on his Part ſhall act nothing contrary to the immediate Succeſſion of the moſt Serene Prince and Infant Don Carlos, whom we ought to defend and ſupport jointly with the Forces of Tuſcany: That he will do nothing which may hinder or retard the Execution of the Orders of the Governors and Miniſters of his Royal Highneſs, conformable to the Regulations made on this Subject; declaring furthermore, that we always be ready to give them Aſſiſtance on the firſt Notice, and to furniſh them with all neceſſary Succours, &c.

Vienna, Nov. 17. The Levies for recruiting the Imperial Infantry are ſtill continued with Vigour; but the Recruits for the Cavalry will be deferred till next Spring. The Court has diſpatched a Courier to Baron Wachtendonck in Corſica, with Orders for him to omit nothing for engaging the Malecontents to ſubmit to the Republick of Genoa on reaſonable Conditions. Mean time, our Court is perſuaded, that they are furniſh'd by ſome foreign Powers with warlike Stores and Proviſions, and all Neceſſaries, and for that Reaſon have inſinuated to the Senate of Genoa the Neceſſity of abating their Pretenſions, in order to bring about an Accommodation.

Berlin, Nov. 22. On the 20th the Marriage of the Princeſs Royal with the Hereditary Prince of Bareith was celebrated here with the utmoſt Splendor, about Six in the Afternoon, at the Royal Caſtle, under a triple Diſcharge of the Cannon. About Eight at Night the illuſtrious Company ſat down to Table; and at drinking of every Health a certain Number of Cannon planted in the Gardens were diſcharged; and after the Feaſt ended, which was about Eleven, Dancing began. The Court was never obſerved to appear with ſuch Luſtre before as on this Occaſion, no leſs than thirty Princes and as many Generals being preſent, all exceeding richly dreſt. The Feaſt was exceeding magnificent, and was ſerved up all in Gold and Silver Plate. Several great Party-Huntings are appointed this Week; after which the Margrave of Bareith, Father to the Princeſs Royal's Conſort, will return to Bareith; but the new illuſtrious Couple will ſtay ſome Time longer.

Compare the above Balance Price Column with the Amſterdam Prices that come over by the Holland Mail due on Fridays. Remit from Amſt. to all Places for which the Amſt. Prices are under the Balance Prices, and Draw on them from London. Remit from London to all Places that are over, and Draw on them from Amſterdam. Whoever Remits and Draws contrary to this Rule, miſſes that Profit which ariſes by the Exchange Prices, put upon our own Money, and that of Foreigners; and as whatever is our Loſs is their Profit, and whatever is our Profit is their Loſs; therefore the Intereſt of every particular Merchant, as alſo the Publick in General, are highly concerned in keeping the Exchanges in our Favour.
